

Cyber Threats and Why All Organizations Are At Risk - April 28, 2011

This seminar will focus on global cyber threat activity and how it has evolved over the past six years. Global cyber thought leaders will discuss its pattern of evolution and how its impact can no longer be minimized and placed on the back burner of your business's strategy.

You will gain a deeper understanding of how cyber intelligence has evolved and perhaps more important, how the intention of threat activity, on a global scale, is being culturally legitimized as a feasible way to garner intelligence.

It is imperative that every executive in your organization understands the current cyber threat landscape and how security and control becomes the responsibility of every employee. By attending this session you will gain the knowledge required to educate your organization and protect it from the next cyber security threat.

Speakers:

Michael Legary is a Principal of Securix Inc., where he helps address business risks associated with Intellectual Property, technology, and compliance in large North American organizations. He specializes in risk assessments, incident handling, and forensic investigations for high-risk enterprise. Michael has extensive experience working with organizations in developing and delivering compliance and information security programs.

Norm Chan joined McAfee/Network Associates in April 2001, as the Systems Engineer for their industry leading Sniffer Technologies business unit. Today, exclusively focused on security, he works with customers of all shapes and sizes helping to assess their security needs and devise solutions. A combined 17 years of IT experience has taken him from the help desk to network architecture, enabling him to provide a unique and practical approach to security.
